Plant Own-Rooted Lilacs

for Lifetime Satisfaction

From personal experience in growing Lilacs, we prefer own-rooted plants. Although slower in their growth, they are long lived and become more beautiful each year; whereas, Lilacs grafted and planted deep sometimes get on their own roots. However, in many cases, they do not, which will cause much disappointment to the grower.

Our fertile sandy soil has proven to be ideal for propagation of heavy own-rooted plants.

Quantity is limited for some varieties but quality is of the highest. All are subject to prior sale.

Should you be interested in varieties that do not appear in this price list we suggest that you contact us as we are propagating many varieties but our stock is too low to list.

Note: Add 3 per cent sales tax to retail price for all shipments in the State of Washington.

Lilacs are tough and stand much neglect and abuse, but even so, good gardeners will want to treat them well. So give them what they want:

1. Good, well-drained soil.
2. Full exposure to sun.
3. Lots of room. Plant 3-5 feet apart for hedges; 6-10 feet for borders; and 10-15 feet for specimens.
4. Yearly, liberal feeding.
5. Occasional liming of your soil if acid.
6. Remove all excess suckering.
7. Cultivate well but not too deeply.
8. Cut off all faded blooms immediately after flowering just below the flower.
9. Remember that large blooms are at all times produced on vigorous young wood.
10. Avoid lopping off the ends of long limbs, but prune only to keep the plant open and shapely.

A portion of our nursery stock

Consider these Qualities of the Lilac

1. Its many uses in your garden.

- a. For large foundation plantings about your home.
- b. For tall screening hedges.
- c. As an accent for the back of a perennial planting.
- d. As a specimen in your flower garden or on your lawn.

2. Hardiness.

- a. Extremely long lived. True age not known as yet. First mentioned in 1554.
- b. Will thrive in the coldest and the hottest climates, if not too far South.
- c. Not fussy in their growing requirements.
- d. Not subject to many common plant diseases.

3. Little care required.

- a. Prune like most any deciduous bush.
- b. Remove excessive suckers as they appear.
- c. Cut off faded flowers after blooming season.
- d. Fertilize as required with a well-balanced commercial fertilizer or barnyard manure.

4. Many colors to choose from for color harmony.

- a. Such as: creamy white, flesh, rosy pink, Wedgewood blue, violet, deep red, rich purple and variegated blooms showing two or more colors in the same bloom.

5. Prolong the blooming season for as long as two months.

- a. By using species and species hybrids as well as the French varieties.

6. Hybrid lilacs.

- a. Frequently bloom when only 18 inches tall and within a comparatively short time after transplanting. The common old-fashioned lilac seldom blooms before it is five or six feet high.

Hybrid Herbaceous Peonies

The Old-Time Garden Flower

A PEONY plant often becomes a family favorite for generations; therefore, buy only the best varieties and top-quality roots. We specialize in growing roots which are true-to-name and in a healthy condition.

A well-matched collection of Peonies produces colorful and fragrant bloom for more than a month. You can select any variety listed below with the feeling that you will be completely satisfied with your choice.

Where to Plant

Plant in average soil, with good drainage and at least half-time sunlight, in beds or rows by themselves, here and there in perennial borders or shrubbery foreground, along walks, etc. Acquire a collection as a hobby.

When to Plant

In late August until the ground freezes.

We are offering approximately 95 varieties of choice Peonies for fall season planting. All are grown from our own private collection which has been carefully selected over the past years. We are sure that this list will give either the Peony connoisseur or the new enthusiast some of the choicest varieties in existence from which to choose.

We vouch for their healthy condition as they are divisions from young field grown stock. All divisions have three to five eyes or more.

VISITORS ARE WELCOME

You are welcome to visit our garden and nursery any time during blooming time in June (usually at its height the first part of June).
